Why is register.com required to license their WHOIS information to third parties?

As an ICANN accredited registrar, register.com is required to create and maintain a WHOIS record for each domain name registered through its service. Additionally, register.com must make available this information to requesting third parties who license the information from register.com. As such, register.com maintains a data file of WHOIS information that contains only the Contact Information of those customers who choose to have their information listed. Please note, however, that ICANN requires that all companies, businesses and organizations license their WHOIS Contact Information for use by inquiring third parties and therefore companies, businesses and organizations do not have the option to choose not to have their information listed.

Do I have to have my WHOIS information included in the licensed data?

If you do not contact register.com to request otherwise, you will be automatically opted out of having your WHOIS information included in the licensed data file. In the event that you wish to include your WHOIS information, you may do so at any time by contacting Customer Support. Keep in mind, however, that all businesses are required to include their WHOIS information in the data file, and therefore cannot opt out.

If I choose to have my WHOIS information licensed, can I change my mind later?

Yes, you can decide to have your WHOIS removed from the licensed data file at any time by contacting Customer Support. Please click here to contact Customer Support.

Please note that ICANN requires that companies, businesses and organizations include WHOIS data in their registrar's third party data file, and are therefore unable to opt out.
