

Michael Busch graduated in law at the Johannes-Gutenberg-Universität Mainz, where he also did basic studies of musical sciences and Anglistics and phenomenology of music with Sergiu Celibidache. Michael Busch obtained his PhD Dr. iuris degree on Spanish constitutional law, having done research work in the University of Valencia, Faculty of Law. He started his professional career as a lawyer in the legal department of a multinational enterprise, and then as the mayor's deputy in local administration.

Since 1994 Michael Busch has been working for the European Commission in different areas (education and vocational training, regional innovation policies, eContent and digital libraries).

He is now responsible for Safer Internet projects and policies in the Information Society and Media Directorate-General with a specific focus on combating child sexual abuse images being spread in the Internet.