.nz model

Challenges

- Involvement of three entities can create confusion around who is responsible for what
- Can be a difficult model to explain so that people understand
- Some matters can arise that 'blur' the clear lines of responsibilities

Benefits

- Clear distinction between policy and technical operations enables policy to be developed in open manner and ensures it meets needs of local Internet community
- Overview of the registry performance by the independent regulator
- Parent company free to focus on their wider public good work with .nz operations managed as a focus by its subsidiaries
- Shared ownership = shared principles
